The Lynchs were in front of Booth's fish in a suspicious manner. David G. Lawrence, a employee of Booth, ordered the men away, when they abused and threatened to kill him.

Lawrence chased them away at the point of a huge fish-knife. They returned armed with soda-water bottles.
Policeman Brereton seeing the crowd, came up and pulled Lawrence away. This infuriated the brothers, who fell upon the officer. John struck him on the head with a bottle, which broke. Thomas wielded a piece of fron.
The officer dropped to the sidewalk, with blood flowing from his wounds.
Meantime word had reached Capt. Doherty that one of his men was being killed. He

The mouth of the tunnel was choked their way through and into the gardens.

Here they were at once surrounded by guards, who could not understand their explanation, but tried to conceal them from the view of an approaching party.
The party was the King and his retinue.
Seeing the disturbance, a gentleman stepped forward and asked what was the matter. The Maine boy, acting as spokesman, his companion by this time shaking with fear, answered that they had been face to face with the King.

"Well," answered the gentleman, in perfect English, "you have seen him. I am the King." He gave each boy several
